How much is too much?
Legislature cuts budget again

ST. LOUIS — University of Missouri-Kansas City (UMKC) students and faculty were shocked, but not surprised, by a quarter million dollar cut to UMKC’s student senate budget. The news of these cuts was met with shock and sadness by UMKC students and faculty, who have been dealing with budget cuts for the last two years.

The cuts began with salads. Followed by the windows offered students over 21 a free glass of champagne. The staff and decorated with tinsel. Stories, guests were greeted by an junior, Delta Zeta and sophomore, Student Organization Association. Zakour, 'Journey senior, Helping Hands Student Organization.

The Current's Student Life section editor, Ashley Richmond, was one of the first to be notified of the student senate cuts. Richmond was shocked and saddened by the news.

"I wasn't expecting to hear about the cuts, and I was really surprised. It was like a punch in the gut," Richmond said.

The cuts were announced last week, and Richmond said she was trying to figure out what the cuts meant for student life on campus.

"It's really scary to hear about the cuts, and it's hard to know what to expect," Richmond said.

The cuts come on top of several years of budget cuts at UMKC. In 2011, the university announced plans to cut $9 million from its budget. In 2012, the university announced plans to cut another $7 million from its budget. In 2013, the university announced plans to cut another $5 million from its budget. In 2014, the university announced plans to cut another $3 million from its budget. In 2015, the university announced plans to cut another $2 million from its budget. In 2016, the university announced plans to cut another $1 million from its budget. In 2017, the university announced plans to cut another $500,000 from its budget.

The cuts have affected nearly every aspect of student life at UMKC. The university has had to cut programs, reduce staff, and reduce student services. The cuts have also affected the university's ability to attract and retain students.

"It's really tough to see what the future looks like," Richmond said. "I'm really worried about the long-term effects of these cuts."

UM-St. Louis Homecoming court

BY ASHLEY RICHMOND
Staff Writer

UM-St. Louis' finest male students strut their stuff Wednesday at the Big Man On Campus competition.

Students gathered in the Pilot House to support the men vying for the title while also contributing to AIDS awareness and prevention.

The annual homecoming event proved to be an entertaining one as Stacy Pearl, biology, junior, explained.

"It came every year to watch the show. The pageants are really entertaining," Pearl said.

The competition began with the introduction of the men in their athletic attire. Contestants Rocky Gy, junior, held his hockey team's second-place trophy high in the air as the team chanted for him.

"We [the UM-St. Louis hockey team] all came out to support Rocky today. We think he's got it," said Matt Brosa, communication, junior.

The audience was captivated by Jordan Ponciroli's version of "This I Promise You" that he sang for the talent competition.

The audience answered questions like, "Is he hip enough?" and "Did you know he could sing like that?"

Some students were amazed at the hidden talents of some students, such as Tyler Cross, psychology, freshman.

"When Rocky [Tyler's agent] personally stepped out in a dress and high heels, I was shocked. This guy has a lot of confidence and really nice legs," Pearl said.

Cross said that he has been preparing at home in East St. Louis for the past eight months.

Karen Creech, freshman, enjoyed the comedy of contestants Jason Ponciroli, business, sophomore.

"I was dying. His jokes were so funny. I laughed so loud I cried," Creech said.

Ponciroli explained his interest in comedy.

"I've always kind of been interested in it and this is the first time I've flown a solo, and it was all right," Ponciroli said.

Next came the formal attire/answer portion, which served as a time for the men to let the audience see their personalities.

Chuck Bronzino, marketing, junior, showed smooth dance moves in the talent portion but stressed his talent during the question/answer competition.

"I want to get a good job," Bronzino said.

David Ponciroli, business, sophomore, admitted he had some anxiety about this portion of the contest.

"I was nervous about the question because I'm not too good at answering questions in front of people," Ponciroli said.

Ponciroli's question revolved choosing between happiness, love, wealth, friendship or success.

Ponciroli responded, "I would choose happiness. As long as you're happy, you can make other happen, and that's all you have to live for."

David Mann, finance, junior, was asked, "If you could wake up tomorrow in another body, what body would you want to wake up in?"

After taking a moment to gather his thoughts, Mann responded, "Pamela Anderson, I could look at myself in the mirror all day.

Mann would go on to claim the title of Big Man On Campus. The entire competition is based not only on the question/answer portion but on the judge's recommendations from all of the pageant's portions, including talent and formal attire.

Ponciroli was selected as Miss UMSL Homecoming Wednesday night at the Pilot House.

Mann is sponsored by the Alpha Xi Delta Sorority, accepted his crown Wednesday night at the Pilot House.

"We decided to select our big man to support the men vying for the court," Ponciroli said.

Ponciroli, who took the applause, said, "The current is hiring again. We are looking for a new Web Editor, a Circulation Manager and writers. Think you could help us out? Drop us a line at current@umsl.edu or come by the office on the third floor of the MSC in room 388. Bring your cover letter and résumé."

Smell a rose by another name

Since the beginning of synthetic chemistry, researchers have been attempting to correlate molecular structure with odor character. The theory behind this is a sort of "lock and key" model in which each receptor inside the nose and brain are associated with the shapes of the molecules that bind to them. However, despite many scientists having a large database of molecules, they have been unable to find a clear relationship between molecular shape and odor. In fact, companies that manufacture odors still work largely by trial and error.

The recent book "The Emperor's New Scent" by Chandler Boucher seeks to find an answer to the question of odor reception. This book was written by the husband of Luca Turin, who has been the subject of much research in the field of odor reception.

Turin has enjoyed a lifelong fascination with scents, eventually leading him to become one of the world's foremost experts on perfume. Turin scored one of the most comprehensive and unusual perfume guides in the 1980s. In addition to his meticulous back-lot enjoyment of odor, Turin was fascinated by scent in his profession as a bio-physicist. He has long questioned the dominant idea that molecular shape determines odor quality. As he observed, some molecules with very different structures could have the same odor, while some molecules that have only very slight differences in structure could smell completely different.

Turin's work became important in an alternative theory proposed by G.M. Dyson in 1938 and expanded by B. Wright in 1977. This theory proposed that it was vibrational motion rather than molecular shape that determined the nature of an odor. This theory has come to be known as the "vibrational theory of smell."

The problem with the vibrational theory is proposed by Wright and Dyson. They theorized that there exist molecules that are made of a plausible biological interaction mechanism that would allow the brain to detect differences in vibrations and translate these differences into the sensation of a smell.

Turin worked for years, experimenting with different possible vibration detectors, until he came upon a mechanism that he believes is capable of distinguishing color by detecting vibrations. The mechanism is called "mechano-electric transducing apparatus," and the physical details are quite complicated.

Basically, the mechanism involves the transfer of electronic information to molecules that are tuned to certain vibrations. After the electronic state is matched, they are picked up by receptor proteins, and the body is able to interpret the vibrations of the molecule and translate it into a neural response.

Turin's research has been met with some criticism, but he got his dream job working for the Human Life Sciences Institute. After years of research, Turin felt that some scent molecules had been found that matched the human body's expectations of a smell. His research had been read by a number of scent researchers who were interested in his work. Turin was able to publish some of his papers, but it was not until his book was about to come out in a press release that many started becoming aware of Turin's work.

Some odor researchers are not eager to accept Turin's proposals, simply because if it is correct that scent molecules have been found it would mean that scent is a reality that should be accepted. Turin's book was written to settle the issue once and for all.

The book is written in a clear and concise manner, making it accessible to all readers who are interested in the science of odor.

Student enlists in Army for aid

BY BRIDGETTE MOORE & KATHRYN BURNS

Financial aid is a necessary resource to help students meet educational expenses. Many families place on students may be beyond their reach and the aid they receive. This barrier is insurmountable for some.

According to Diana Johnson in Admissions, the University of Missouri-St. Louis has an estimated 250 students who receive the Government Bill each semester. Full-time students are paid $900 a month for 36 months.

"I know people who come from places like Columbus or from the South," said Tracy English, a resident of the South. "They can't afford to go to college. They just can't afford to go. Even when they try to go, they're not going to have enough money to support them through college." That's just the hard fact of the United States.

Tracy enlisted in the Army just before he graduated from high school. "I wanted to make some money for school," he said. "I thought the money would make it easier for me to stay in school." That was true for many students.

"I didn't go in for the GI Bill; I went in for the GI Bill to earn money for school." He said that he would not have been able to go to college if he had to pay for the full cost of tuition.

Tracy's funding from the Army came out in August. That was the time he would need to complete his studies.

Some students feel that it is important to join the military just to pay for college expenses.

"Some go in just to receive the GI Bill, and that's not a good reason," said Kira Bracy, a resident of the South. Griese describes himself as a "goal-oriented, proactive" kind of student who tries to do as much as he can in his spare time. He advises others, "Be assertive. There is a lot to do on this campus right now, so go after it and use your fingertips. All you have to do is reach out, your fingers can go to the edges of the world, but I think it's important to use them to help others, not just to help yourself."

Basketball

Moving already claimed a 75-69 victory over conference-rival SIU-Edwardsville on Feb. 22, something would have been sure for the UM-St. Louis Riverwomen's basketball team than another victory over the SIUE squad in the Feb. 22 Horizon Women's game. Well, the Riverwomen got a taste of overcoming their Horizon game, obtaining a 60-39 victory over SIUE.

UM-St. Louis was led in scoring by forward Jessica Woods and guard Brionne Hallsottton, who each took 13 points in the game. UM-St. Louis Assistant Coach Marie Simmons noticed that the level of play of the team is compared with other teams plus our season.

“We have our entire team,” Simmons said. “They play as a team to dominate that entire game. The way we played, we are in the best form of presence.

If we play like we did tonight, we can make it to the conference tournament.”

Statistically Ronnie Banks is ranking one of the top point guards in the Great Lakes Valley Conference. He is currently ranked eight in assists with 80, eleventh in steals with 32, and fourteenth in three-pointers, with 33 on the season. These are remarkable statistics considering the Rivermen are ranked in only 17 game losing streak, but Banks is more than UM - St. Louis than just numbers. “Sam, I’m really proud of you. This is a great job with this notch in the win column.”

Tony Hawkins, the R-men Head Coach, continued. “We got two games left, and we hope to continue and we can pull this off in the next game. He’s one of the most exciting players on the team. We’ve had him play as a team to dominate that entire game.”

“His performance today is exactly what we expected. He’s been playing at a high level, and he’s been consistent.” Hawkins went on to say. “He’s been playing at a high level, and he’s been consistent.”

UM-St. Louis Riverwomen basketball

Outsourcing rival SIU-Edwardsville in the second half wasn’t enough for the UM-St. Louis women’s basketball team to claim a victory in their Feb. 22 Horizon Women’s game. The Riverwomen, who outsourced SIUE 36-28 in the second half, suffered a 61-52 loss.

The team, outsourced by SIUE 35-25 in the first half of the game, but new in their seventh game in a row. Assistant Coach Chris Jones said that, although the team suffered a loss, there was some improvement displayed in the game.

“They did a great job in the second half,” said the Coach. “They really are a young team, but they’re learning each day from their mistakes. We’re trying to do our best with them.”

He is a member of the Screen Actors Guild and the Writers Guild of America. Fishman is also known for his advocacy of civil rights and social justice issues. He has been involved in numerous political campaigns, and his writings often address topics such as income inequality, racism, and government corruption. Fishman is a lifelong Democrat and an advocate of progressive politics. He is currently working on a new book about the political climate in the United States and the challenges facing the country in the 21st century.
"History lives in 'Gods and Generals'," by Catherine Margaretson

When it came out a few years ago, "Gettysburg" had only modest box office success, but it is now becoming a potent weapon in the debate over the Civil War. The film is a large-cast epic based on the actual historical events surrounding the Battle of Gettysburg. It is a dramatic account of the war's turning point, with a cast of thousands and a budget of $25 million.

The film is directed by Alan J. Pakula, who has previously directed such films as "The Conversation" and "Fury." The screenplay is by William Goldman, who has written for such films as "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid" and "All the President's Men."

The film stars Pierce Brosnan as Robert E. Lee, who is offered the command of the Union Army but declines, stating that he feels loyalty is to his states, not his country. The film also features John C. Reilly as Lt. Col. Thomas Chamberlain, a military man who is a close friend of Lee. The film ends with the famous Gettysburg Address, delivered by President Abraham Lincoln.

The film has been praised for its historical accuracy and its portrayal of the war's emotional and political dimensions. It has also been criticized for its oversimplification of the war's causes and for its romanticization of the generals. Still, it remains a powerful film that has captured the attention of the public and the press.

The film is now available on DVD and Blu-ray, and it is a must-see for anyone interested in the Civil War or in the history of America. It is a film that will be remembered for many years to come.

"It's good to be king...of the world," by Charles Shubert

"Gods and Generals" is a film about the Civil War, specifically the Battle of Gettysburg. The film is directed by Alan J. Pakula and stars Pierce Brosnan as Robert E. Lee, John C. Reilly as Lt. Col. Thomas Chamberlain, and John DiMaggio as Lt. Col. Franklin S. Patch.

The film opens with a scene of Lee in his tent, preparing for battle. He is joined by his officers, and they discuss the upcoming battle. The film then cuts to the battlefield, where Lee is leading his troops into battle.

The film is a fast-paced and exciting tale of the Civil War, with action-packed battles and dramatic scenes. It is a film that will keep you on the edge of your seat throughout.

One of the film's strengths is its historical accuracy. The filmmakers have spent a great deal of time researching the Civil War, and their efforts are evident in the film's attention to detail. The filmmakers have also done a great job of capturing the sights and sounds of the Civil War, from the uniforms of the soldiers to the battlefields themselves.

The film's main weakness is its portrayal of the generals. While the filmmakers have done a good job of capturing the personalities of the generals, they have not always been successful in bringing them to life on the screen. In particular, the film's treatment of Robert E. Lee has been criticized for its oversimplification.

Overall, "Gods and Generals" is a film that will appeal to fans of the Civil War and fans of epic films in general. It is a film that will keep you riveted from beginning to end, with exciting battles and exciting characters. It is a film that is sure to be remembered for many years to come.
Well, we’re back after a two-week reprieve and, yep, we do feel a bit rusty. And so, once again, Jason and I gave ourselves a bit of a tanning, although this time it was in private. But fear not, dear reader, for this is but a minor setback. After all, we are always glad to help.
