UM to award scholarships from tuition settlement

BY PAUL HACKBARTH
News Editor

The University of Missouri began accepting applications on Jan. 13 for scholarships from the more than 104,000 eligible students involved in the tuition class-action lawsuit.

The UM system established a $10 million scholarship fund after three students filed a lawsuit against the UM Board of Curators for "violating the provisions of Section 172.360, RSMo 1998, by charging tuition to Missouri youth over the age of sixteen years enrolled in undergraduate classes at the [four UM campuses]."

The three student plaintiffs, Douglas Sharp, Sandra Lynn and Frederick Eccher III, with the help of St. Louis attorney Robert Herman, reached a settlement in April. The St. Louis County Circuit Court approved the decision in December.

The agreement created a $10 million scholarship for eligible students who attended class at any of the four UM campuses between the winter semester of 1995 and the fall semester of 2001. Entitled students must have also been between the ages of 16 and 22 during their enrollment at the University.

Instead of each campus's financial aid office handling applications, the scholarship fund has been centralized in Columbia, Mo. The UM system recently hired Carolyn Allen, coordinator for the tuition settlement scholarship, to oversee the application process.

"As of [Jan. 19], we have received 483 online applications and the information was released on the previous Friday," she said. Allen said 4,770 scholarships of at least $500 each will be available and awarded starting in the fall semester of 2006.

Not only are certain students eligible, but if any funds are left over, spouses and natural born or adopted children of the students are also entitled to part of the scholarship money.

The terms of the settlement state, "applications for such scholarships would be made annually and are not automatically renewable."

The fund will remain in effect for 25 years. After which, Joe Moore, director of media relations for the UM system, explained any money left over in the fund at that time will be transferred to a general scholarship fund.

After the settlement was announced, the UM system was unsure of where the funds would come from. However, now, "the $10 million in scholarship funds will come from the University reserves," Moore said. He explained the reserves are used for three purposes: to protect bond ratings, to take advantage of unexpected opportunities and to use for unexpected costs.

Student curator's status in doubt

Gov. Blunt plans not to reappoint Maria Curtis

BY MELISSA S. HAYDEN
Staff Writer

When Maria Curtis applied to be student curator for the University of Missouri system, she believed she would fill the position for a two-year term. However, a decision made by Gov. Matt Blunt will cut her appointment short.

Spence Jackson, director of communications for the office of Blunt, said, "She [Curtis] will not be reappointed. Her term expired on Dec. 31, 2005."

Curtis was officially named student curator July 22, 2005 by Blunt. She has been representing the UM system for approximately five months.

Missouri Statute Section 172.035 states, "The term of the student representative shall be two years, except that the person first appointed shall serve until January 1, 1986."

"The statute says, 'two years.' Can that change at any time, like there was no rule or law?" Curtis asked. "Are we as a campus going to allow someone to ignore the statutes of Missouri?"

According to Jackson, it is a "two-year term, not appointment."

"Previous campuses were not interpreting the Statute properly. We're trying to bring that in compliance with the law," he said.

According to D'Andre Braddix,

Student Government Association president, if Blunt sends the decision of choosing the next student curator to the Inter-campus Student Council, it plans to only send Curtis' name back.

"There was a lot of confusion (over Curtis' position) and it has basically been a rumor mill," he said.

Curtis said, "It is not fair that the St. Louis campus only gets a short representation. It's not equal, and that's not how it should be."

She also said it is not in the Board's best interest to go from one person to another person in such a short time after all of the time already invested in training her.

Bruce Baker, project engineer for Kozeny Wagner, looks on as the new dorms are being built. The warm weather has been helping the builders make progress. The construction company is still expecting to finish on time in July 2006.

Construction of new residential halls on track to open in fall

BY SEAN MICHAEL
Staff Writer

Progress is being made on the construction of the new residential halls on South Campus, which began a year ago and is scheduled for completion in July 2006.

"The residential hall is 55 percent complete," said Bob Samples, director of media, marketing and printing services at UM-St. Louis.

The new dorms feature an elevated walkway that serves as a connector from the Residential Building to the Nursing Administration Building and Seton Hall. In addition, the dorms include five floors with an elevator and a stairwell that joins the different levels of the hall.

Plans call for 431 beds, a fitness center, an outdoor patio with a pool, on-site laundry facilities and a convenience store. Two community study rooms in the north and south wings of each floor are also being built. The cost of the construction project is slightly under $27 million, Samples said.

Project Engineer Bruce Baker feels confident about the project.

"We're a couple weeks behind schedule, but we intend to make all that up," he said. So far no major unforeseen problems have occurred, Baker said.

Construction is progressing at an even pace and currently, focus on inside work is underway. Baker anticipates that retaining walls and site work will be completed in the spring. In addition, the five floors of the building have all been framed.

The brick work is almost done on the north wing, according to Baker. The other areas of the building still need a lot of brick work to be completed. The hall is secured for the winter to prevent hazardous working conditions.

"Fortunately, it's been kind of mild winter, which has helped the construction project," Baker said.

The plan is for the students to be enthusiastic about their new housing environment when the residential hall opens in August. The dorms will be closer to the students' classrooms.

The new building was designed with a community theme in mind. The students have the opportunity to congregate in the study and the common lounge in each community. The residential hall assistant on each floor will help the students acquire academic and social skills.

"These dorm rooms will be better than what were available 20 years ago," Baker said.

Although this new hall will significantly improve the parking situation at UM-St. Louis, the students will have an easier time getting to their classrooms from the new residential hall. The plan is for the residents to have the closest spaces to the building once people have become used to the flow of traffic.

With most of the students commuting to UM-St. Louis, a great demand for campus housing does not exist. Less than 10 percent of students live on campus, but the number is expected to grow in the next few years.

With the project nearing completion by July, students will need to be aware of the options they can afford. The hall has been built to fulfill the students' needs and make their lives easier.

"Students interested in living in the new hall are encouraged to come to Residential Life," Samples said. Students can sign up to apply for new dorm rooms by calling 516-877.

Tsunami reconstruction project improving lives of Sri Lanka students

BY MELISSA S. HAYDEN
Staff Writer

UM-St. Louis' Tsunami Reconstruction Campaign is taking tiny steps to create huge improvements in the lives of Sri Lanka students.

Jody Miller, professor of criminology, made a return five-week visit to Sri Lanka during UM-St. Louis' winter break. The visit was another part of her continuing efforts to monitor the campaign.

Both schools, Andaragasyaya Vidalia, [school] in Kirinda and Thambiluvil Maha Vidalia, [secondary school] in Thirukkovil have been rebuilt. The project funded the purchase of furniture for both schools. However, the furniture for Thambiluvil is in storage because of what Premila Gamage, a member of the Sri Lanka Library association, described in an e-mail interview as "unhealthy political situations."

Miller got within 30 kilometers of one of the schools before she felt she should not continue in the rebel controlled area. She said within the government controlled area, checkpoints were placed every few kilometers and military officers were everywhere.

"This trip I was determined to go, but now they're using landmines, so I decided I better not go," she said.

The project gave the schools electricity for the first time, computers, and other items that many of the children never would have had the chance to see or use. However, Miller said the most important part of the project is that money collected goes beyond rebuilding the schools. She said the project is an opportunity to improve the lives of the students over there.

Gamage said, "This can be taken as a model library. The activities that we are involved in, such as upgrading education, will definitely help to enhance the quality of lives in the community."

Miller, Gamage and Nilu Abeyratne, assistant lecturer and postgraduate of the Institute of Archeology at the University of Kelaniya, Sri Lanka, are the only three coordinators on the project. Abeyratne represents Miller when she is away.

"With just the three of us working on the project, there is far less bureaucracy in getting things done. In about two and a half months, the schools were built," Miller said. "Also, we can tightly monitor the money. Not a cent has gone away from the project."

With the cooperation of the principals of the schools, they are trying to create programs for the students. Miller was disappointed that programs have not been implemented in Thambiluvil.

One project that has already taken place at Andaragasyaya is an activity in which the students painted murals to decorate the library.

"I was going to send down an artist but decided to let the kids paint the murals, so the library has a meaning to them," Miller said.

"I bought chocolates bars, cookies and other equivalents to junk food for the children during the mural painting."

CCJ professor leaves UMSL for Arizona

Scott Decker, department chair and curators professor for the criminology and criminal justice department at UM-St. Louis, has accepted an offer to become the chair of the CCJ program at Arizona State University. Decker will leave UM-St. Louis and start his new position at Arizona on July 1, 2006. Decker has worked at the University for almost 30 years and served as the department chair for 15 years.

"I would say that the recruitment and development of a world-class faculty, initiation of the [master's] and [doctorate] programs and the recent U.S. News and World ranking of our [doctorate program] as 4th in the discipline are things I have been proud to have been associated with in the University," he said. "Aside from the Cardinals, these are the things I will miss most about St. Louis."

Decker's jobs outside of UM-St. Louis included serving as co-principal investigator of projects involving youth violence, director of the St. Louis Homicide Project and partner with the St. Louis city police department on a panel to recommend changes in procedures instructing how crimes are reported. "The chance to have an impact on policy, the way that the criminal and juvenile justice systems operate, has been the highlight of my time in St. Louis," he said. Decker said the CCJ department will name a replacement for him in February.

Phi Kappa Phi offers new scholarship

Phi Kappa Phi, an honor society at UM-St. Louis, offered a new scholarship to its members this semester. The scholarship for $1,000 honors John Anderson, retired professor from the College of Business Administration. "This is the first time that the UMSL chapter of Phi Kappa Phi has offered a scholarship of its own," Chapter President Jeanne Zarucchi said. A recent growth in membership helped the society sponsor its own annual scholarship, she explained. Phi Kappa Phi member Eric Tyhurst, senior, math and education, was the first recipient of the award. Each applicant wrote an essay for the chance to win the scholarship.

"All of the applicants had outstanding academic records, but the selection committee found Mr. Tyhurst's essay to be of exceptional quality," Zarucchi said. Tyhurst wrote in an e-mail interview, "Needless to say, I was very happy upon learning that I was awarded the scholarship." Tyhurst will be honored at Phi Kappa Phi's initiation in April.

Sue Shear offers "Pipeline to Local Office"

The Sue Shear Institute for Women in Public Life at UM-St. Louis will hold a workshop for women interested in running for municipal or political offices or working with campaigns on Jan. 30 and 31 from 6 to 9 p.m. each day. The workshop called "Pipeline to Local Office" costs $45 and will take place in Century Room C of the Millennium Student Center. Women working in local political offices will help instruct the workshop, where participants can learn how to budget a campaign, target voters and raise money. Call 516-4727 for more information.

Optometry professor named Fulbright Scholar

BY JAVI NADAL
Staff Writer

Timothy Wingert, associate professor of optometry at UM-St. Louis, has been named a J. William Fulbright Scholar and will spend the spring 2006 semester at Poznan University of Medical Science in Poland.

The Fulbright scholarship allows the professor recipients to be in direct contact with many universities around the world as well as meet people from other countries and gain research and teaching insights.

"Poznan University of Medical Sciences is a large institution with optometry, medicine, and dentistry as well as other programs," Wingert said. "There will be an opportunity to observe how those programs are structured and run in a country with a different health care system."

The possibility of research and teaching abroad helps students and professors acquire different points of view about their fields of study.

"There are many different ways of doing things," Wingert said. "The more different ways you become familiar with, [the more it] allows you to use different approaches and approach issues with potentially new solutions."

Not only will Wingert research at Poznan University, but he will also teach courses and deliver a series of lectures with the help of a translator and handouts. He said this will allow him to share those experiences with his students and other colleagues.

Wingert graduated from Illinois College of Optometry in 1979. Since then, he developed his interest in access to optometric care. In 1988, he became a professor at UM-St. Louis and since then, he has worked to enhance the College of Optometry and the University through many committees, panels and councils.

Wingert's research and interests over the years have focused on various issues, including the validity of clinical testing procedures, such as vision screening tests on school children; access to services; and how optometric services are delivered to different populations including nursing home residents.

"A lot of the stuff I've done here has been related to public health," Wingert said. "At Poznan University, I plan to work with my hosts regarding vision conditions that affect children." Wingert was asked to lecture on clinical refraction, low vision and other topics.

Larry Davis, dean of the College of Optometry at UM-St. Louis, said being named a Fulbright Scholar is a great distinction.

"Dr. Wingert will no doubt make a positive influence on the delivery of eye and vision care in Poland," Davis said.

The Fulbright program began in 1946 and was created by the former U.S. Senator J. William Fulbright. Since then thousands of select American scholars and professionals have lectured and conducted research abroad while others have had the same experience in the United States.

The principal of Andaragasyaya, Kitsiri Jayaratne, is combining his efforts with Miller, Gamage and Abeyratne to concoct program ideas. According to Miller, he would like to see a program for the parents of the children to show them the importance of their children's education and another that allows all of the students to go on a field trip to Colombo.

Miller said, "He [Jayaratne] has a vision for the school of trying to provide the kids with opportunities their parents didn't have."

Projects Miller has slated for this year include campus organizations sponsoring the students, which should cost $20 per student, and selling greeting cards with prints of four of the murals the children painted. She is also working with Joel Glassman, director of the Center for International Studies, to get UM-St. Louis students to visit Sri Lanka to help the children hands-on.

"It [would be best for] students to come and help with this project as volunteers," Gamage said.

Criminology professor Jody Miller made a five-week return visit to Sri Lanka over the winter break. Miller is coordinating tsunami relief efforts through UM-St. Louis for the reconstruction of two schools in Sri Lanka.

After she heard "a lot of rumors," Curtis was under the impression that she was going to be reappointed.

According to Jackson, she will continue to serve as student curator until Blunt appoints a new candidate. Despite her disappointment, she is ready and willing to serve as curator until the governor appoints a new one.

"I still support the governor. He's got a tough job. I hope that this can be figured out," Curtis said.

The next student representative will come from UM-Columbia following the rotation as stated in Missouri Statute Section 172.035. The order of rotation is as follows: UM-Columbia, UM-Rolla, UM-Kansas City and UM-St. Louis.

According to Curtis, the governor will be releasing a memo regarding her appointment soon. This memo should include information discussing the future curator and when he or she might be appointed.

"Whatever happens, I will be fine," she said. "I just feel bad for the campus only getting a [five-month] representation."

She said, "I have been overwhelmed with how many people really care about this and are being so supportive. I am really lucky to be working with people like that."

Braddix said, "We will do everything we can reaffirm our faith in Maria."

OPINION

TWO FULL YEARS

Governor shouldn't shortchange UM with less than a full term for Maria Curtis

Since when did two years turn into six months? No, this is not a test question from a new abstract math course at UM-St. Louis, but rather this is the question that Gov. Matt Blunt has yet to explain in his decision to not reappoint Maria Curtis as student curator.

The student curator is a prestigious position to have. The student curator serves as the voice of the entire University of Missouri system on the Board of Curators. This representative is chosen from one of the four campuses rotating every two years.

When it came time for UM-St. Louis to have its turn, Curtis stepped up to the plate, applied for the position, was interviewed during three sets of interviews (by the Student Government Association at UM-St. Louis, the Intercampus Student Council and a representative from Blunt's office) and was then handpicked by Blunt himself.

Curtis began her term on Aug. 1, 2005, but her appointment abruptly ended on Dec. 31, 2005, by far shy from the two-year term that she was supposed to serve. So why has Blunt chosen not to reappoint her? More importantly, why has the governor of Missouri chosen to ignore a Missouri statute?

The student curator position is outlined in Missouri Revised Statute Section 172.035. According to the statute, "The term of the student representative shall be two years, except that the person first appointed shall serve until January 1, 1986."

If a loophole exists, it is not very clear. In fact, a loophole like this that takes away Curtis' representation of the student voice should not even be a loophole that exists.

Since Jan. 1, Curtis has been left in the dark about whether or not she will be reappointed. As of now, Curtis is still the student curator until another student is appointed, according to Spence Jackson, spokesman for Blunt.

Blunt's office responded to the uncertainty by saying that previous student curators' appointments did not follow the correct procedures of being reappointed. The decision not to reappoint Curtis is meant to help correct the issue. But why wait until the middle of the student curator's term? Would it not make more sense to correct the appointment procedure after Curtis' term is up?

It is unfair to continue keeping Curtis uncertain about the future of her own position. While the governor may have other duties keeping him from quickly responding to this issue, it still needs to be resolved.

Appointing another student curator in Curtis' place would not benefit the students of the UM system. The student curator would need to be trained and training takes time. The University needs Curtis to remain as its representative because she knows the ropes.

The SGA of UM-St. Louis and the ISC plan to show their opposition to Blunt's decision this week. The other organizations and groups of faculty, staff and students of the University should show their support, as well, for our student curator to keep her so she can continue representing our campus and the entire UM system. Curtis has not let us down yet.

We at The Current believe Blunt should reappoint her to the position to serve the full two years that were promised to her under the Missouri statute.

A new year means fresh air and no cigarettes

As the big hand slowly crept to midnight on New Years Eve, some people around me rushed to find a significant other to kiss, while others discussed their resolutions to end bad habits.

I have been one of those people who in the past has vowed to make changes in my life and who has made resolutions to live a healthier and better lifestyle; however, in past years I have found myself simply giving up on my resolutions.

Last year, I promised to exercise more and to lose weight. At the time, my resolution seemed like it was off to a good start. For two months, I made frequent trips to a fitness club and sacrificed junk food and carbs completely. I managed to lose 10 pounds, but as soon as March rolled around, I became busier as a student and was less interested in running on a treadmill.

I am sure that everyone has found themselves in the same situation as me. Sure, it is easy to make a resolution, but it is also easy to break it.

This year, I told myself that I am no longer going to be a victim to nicotine and I am going to save my lungs by giving up my bad habit of smoking. Some might say that quitting smoking is easy, but those who have lived their lives around cigarettes know this is not necessarily true.

If quitting was easy, cigarette companies would not post labels such as, "Caution, smoking could increase the chances of becoming addicted" on packs. There would also be no such thing as Nicotrol patches, Nicorette gum and pills like Zyban to help people break away from this habit. Recently, there have even been people who have had electric shocks to prevent their cravings.

This is not my first attempt to quit. I once tried the patch, but became so desperate and edgy that I wanted to rip the sticker off my arm, roll it up and smoke it. On my second attempt, I tried the gum. It worked for awhile. I lost my addiction to cigarettes, but I found a new addiction to Nicorette. I became so dependent on the gum that I found that I was investing more money on it than when I purchased smokes.

MELISSA MCCRARY

I have realized that my addiction to nicotine has entirely ruled and controlled my life. In the morning, a cup of coffee seemed to taste so much better with a cigarette. To relieve stress in between classes and my part-time job, I would spend my 15 minute break smoking. Nothing sounded more appropriate than ending a hard day with a cigarette before bed.

This time around, I am taking the "cold turkey" approach. It has been 11 days since the last time I lit up. Sure, I have had cravings and have thought "one last cigarette won't hurt," but every time these thoughts enter my mind, I grab a piece of bubblegum, a gummy worm or a piece of hard candy for a quick fix.

Over and over teachers have told me about the dangers of smoking, but I never really paid attention or simply thought "that can't possibly happen to me." What I now know is that everything that they had said is true.

According to the National Cancer Institute at www.cancer.gov, cigarette smoking is the most preventable cause of death in the U.S.: smoking causes 30 percent of cancer deaths each year and 87 percent of smokers are diagnosed with lung cancer.

Besides the never-ending list of health problems that smoking can lead to, smoking also ages one's appearance by causing fine lines and wrinkles, stains people's teeth and gums and leaves a strong odor.

Is putting tar, nicotine and carbon monoxide in your body worth it? As for the "new" me, I think not.

Patriot Act hits close to home

The FBI used to tap my phone. So when I heard that President Bush ran an illegal program to eavesdrop on international phone calls, it meant something to me.

The FBI believed I was a threat to our security. In my reckless youth, I spent three months as a member of the Weathermen, an offshoot of the Students for a Democratic Society. In the 1960s, SDS was the leading predominantly white student group involved in the civil rights and anti-war movement.

Weathermen renounced non-violence and eventually became an underground group. Its most notorious act was to place a bomb in the U.S. Capitol that almost destroyed a women's rest room. I left before Weathermen went underground.

Anyway, as a result of my ties to Weathermen, the FBI tapped my phone and wasted a lot of time monitoring my behavior. My fellow radicals and I expected that our phones were tapped and tried to never say anything on the phone that would interest the FBI.

One time, I needed to meet with someone about something I wouldn't talk about on the phone and told him to meet me "where all good guerillas meet."

When we showed up at the gorilla cage at the Zoo, two members of the police intelligence squad were standing nearby. I made a face at them. They glared at me.

In those days, I received a threatening letter in the mail on the same day each week. (Thursday, I think.) For example, I opened an envelope one day to find a picture of me taken at a demonstration with the words neatly printed in pencil on the back, "Bang, bang."

BENJAMIN ISRAEL
Columnist

The worst letter I got came on the stationery of the local civil rights group ACTION. It was ungrammatical, in a phony African-American idiom and anti-Semitic. The "brothers" threatened to beat me up.

I called a friend in ACTION and asked her what was going on. She told me the ACTION office had been broken into and stationery was stolen. "Probably some right-wing nuts," she said.

In 1976, a Congressional committee investigated abuses by the FBI, and I found out those right-wing nuts were, in fact, the FBI.

Most of those threats did not bother me much.

The first time I ever received a threat like that, it did, however. I was alone staffing an office called The Peace Information Center in the Delmar Loop when the phone rang. The man calling told me that if I didn't leave right away, he and others would come there and beat me up.

I was shaking as I quickly closed up the center. As I locked the door, another Center volunteer walked up and asked me what I was doing. When I told him of the threat, he smiled and said, "Don't worry. We get calls like that all the time."

However, it did bother my parents when their phone rang with threats to blow up their house or kill their son. It turned out that was the FBI as well.

My father was dying of congestive heart failure, and I'm sure the FBI did not make his last years any easier.

There is a reason our founding fathers passed the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution.

It says, "The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized."

The amendment lists no exceptions. Legally, a wiretap is a search.

There is a reason Congress passed the Foreign Intelligence Security Act, that requires the executive branch to get a warrant from a special court to tap phone calls. Without oversight, the President, and those acting on his behalf, can, and often will, abuse power.

Bin Laden vs. America

Here's Osama! After over a year Osama Bin Laden has come out of his cave and he has brought a message. His message is to try and strike fear across the globe, and especially right here in America.

He has apparently been keeping up with our public opinion polls, because he cited the fact that the majority of Americans want to pull troops out of Iraq. He told us that George W. Bush is a liar for reasons concerning our security. He made it clear that if the US didn't negotiate with him that he would attack "The Heart of your land." He could be speaking figuratively, but maybe he means to attack the Heartland of America. Either way, I am not sure I can just blow his comments to the wind, and forget them.

Once again the Bush administration took its stance of, we don't negotiate with terrorists. An easy way to say that they don't have any answers for why Bin Laden is still out there.

Maybe I am a pessimist, or a realist, but I am not convinced we are safe. Who should I believe? Should I believe the US government? Or should I believe Bin Laden?

Let's compare the two:

Personnel
USA- Government full of corrupt politicians who steal money, lie under oath, and are impaired by monetary judgements (halliburton, oil, Saudi friends)

OBL - Corrupt extremist who has lots of money and has killed a lot of people (9/11, planes, Saudi friends)

Objectives:
USA- To destroy people (terrorists) that might do harm to them, maybe. To free the people of Iraq and to place a government of their choosing. (Paranoia, preemptive, guns)

OBL - To destroy people (infidels) that might do harm to them, maybe. To free the people of Iraq and to place a government of his choosing. (Paranoia, preemptive, RPGs)

Religion
USA - Evangelical Christianity. Close relations with Judaism. Although denying religion plays a part, and they try not to sound like fanatics, they are. (In God we trust)

OBL - Fanatical Islam. Not denying that religion has a part, in fact, religion is a big reason for his hatred. (In Allah we trust, not afraid to admit religious background)

After some analysis, I have come to realize it does not matter who I think is lying, or whom I should believe. Just like the civilians in London, Madrid, New York, Afghanistan, Iraq, Israel, Palestine, and plenty of others, we are all victims of the same war. Let us not also forget the soldiers who fight and die on both sides of the lines. Osama Bin Laden is alive, and he is planning. Do you believe him?

WashU study finds fat overload kills cells

In January, people often think about losing weight and getting in shape. Fat seems to be on everyone's minds. Now a new study from Washington University gives us another reason to fear fat besides how we might look in tight clothes.

When fats accumulate in cells other than adipose (fat) cells, then cell death

BY CATE MARQUIS
Science Columnist

or dysfunction occurs, according to Dr. Sean Schaffer, the senior author of the study and associate professor of medicine at Washington University.

The new study will be published in the February 2006 issue of the science journal Molecular Biology of the Cell.

The Washington University researchers found a protein, EF1A-1, which caused cell death in mammalian cells that have too much saturated fat. It is the internal skeleton of cells, the cytoskeleton, which is affected by high concentrations of these lipids. When production of the protein was blocked, the cells survived.

The researchers also pointed to preliminary studies that suggest that the development of diabetes is linked to the accumulation of fat in the pancreas and to insulin resistance in muscle cells. Clinical studies have also linked heart problems to cell dysfunction and death associated with fats.

The researchers looked at the effects of palmitate, a saturated fat commonly found in American diets, on mammalian cells grown in culture.

Cells have several mechanisms to store or use fat in cells but saturated fats like palmitate are poorly stored by the usual methods. Palmitate in the cells led to a rapid increase in levels of the protein EF1A-1, which led to rapid cell death. EF1A-1 is a common cellular function with several functions including production of proteins and maintenance of the cell's cytoskeleton. Blocking the production of EF1A-1 in cells with high levels of palmitate protected the cells from cell death. Furthermore, the researchers also found that removal of the EF1A-1 protein allowed cells to withstand normally damaging levels of highly reactive oxygen. The results suggested that cell death came from oxidative stress and cytoskeletal changes associated with abnormal levels of EF1A-1. Future studies will attempt to define the exact mechanisms and changes. The study also uncovered other proteins involved in the negative impact of fat in cells.

Saturated fats like palmitate have long been the focus of concern for a healthy diet. But this is not taking sides in the low fat - low carb diet wars. It is not just the consumption of fats that is the problem. Excess consumption of carbohydrates converts those calories to fats to be stored in the body. Too many calories, too much food, too little exercise are the main culprits. But you might want to skip that palm oil.

Learning in London doesn't end when we leave the classroom

This study abroad went wonderfully until classes had to start and ruin my vacation. Classes started last Monday morning. That's right, no Martin Luther King Jr. day for me.

My British Life and Culture (BLC) course, required for all Missouri London participants, is quickly becoming my favorite class. Tuesday nights, we have a lecture by a visiting professor and Wednesdays are reserved for field trips.

This week, Dr. Wendy Stokes from London Metropolitan University explained 'Modern England.' She explained that England is the country we're visiting. Britain consists of England and Wales; Great Britain is England, Wales, and Scotland. The United Kingdom is all of those with Northern Ireland.

Wednesday, our BLC fieldtrip included a journey to the Museum of London. Of course, I understand that many people are bored to tears at the very mention of a museum, but as an avid museum junkie, I loved the fact that the Museum of London is chronological. Artifacts from London's earliest Neanderthal cousins surround visitors, and by the time a person leaves, she has reached the midst of the early twentieth century.

As much as the classes here are incorporating London as a classroom, it is still essential to spend some nights in the flat reading "Vindication of the Rights of Women" or whatever else we've been assigned. Homework is cross-cultural.

For those not involved in an internship, Fridays are free for us to do as we please. So I used my Friday to travel to the famous Portobello Road Marketplace. Normally, the market reaches the height of business on Saturdays, so it wasn't crowded as I wandered the streets.

Little stands crowded the sidewalks, reminiscent of rock concert souvenir shops. Even on a Friday afternoon, I could find clothes, gifts, chocolates, sandwiches, purses, suitcases, antiques, jewelry, and anything else you can imagine.

LAURA AYERS
London Correspondent

Many of the shops reminded me of those on the Delmar Loop. Smelling strongly of incense, they sell tattoos, Indian jewelry and clothing, Bob Marley paraphernalia, and of course, buttons proclaiming the need for marijuana legalization. Having only been here a few days and to only four pubs (or public houses, as they're called) I cannot claim to be a pub expert, yet.

The drinking age here is 18, and as I will turn 21 in February, it was my first taste of legal alcohol, as well for many others in the group.

Some were afraid when we first arrived that they would be forced to drink room-temperature beer that resembled motor oil. Fortunately, this has turned out to be an incorrect stereotype.

While ale is still available, we have several other alcoholic options. On that we've all found quite fascinating is the Fruli, a strawberry flavored beer. While I'm told that it can also be found in cities like New York and Los Angeles, it was news to my taste buds.

Really, a pub is no different from your local neighborhood bar. The bartenders know the regulars, and several friends can meet up after work for some fun. On a slow night, the atmosphere is almost cozy.

But on a weekend, you are unlikely to find a cozy pub anywhere in London. That also applies to football nights (that's soccer to us). On night like that, if I'm lucky, I can squeeze in at a table with several friends to watch the game at a safe distance. One football night in particular, I stood pressed up against complete strangers. I clung to my Fruli and cheered every time Manchester United scored a goal. After snagging a seat, I sat back closed my eyes, and considered my London experience so far.

Different, I thought. But not a bad different.

UMSL needs a more visible mascot

Have you noticed our mascot the Riverman around? I have done some research during the semester break to find out who our mascot was. I found out that, according to the UM-St. Louis search, from 1999-2004 the mascot was the Riverpup.

I've noticed by looking at other colleges my friends attend, that we have no actual mascot that I can see.

Let's quickly take a look at other Universities around the state. UM-Columbia has Truman the tiger. Truman the tiger is everywhere.

Truman is highly visible. Missouri State University has the Bear.

A huge statue on campus and the bear plasters all of their T-shirts and sports memorabilia and other items. Truman State has the bulldog, which has a rich history at the school, and the school dedicates a website to the bulldog alone.

Southeast Missouri State has just undergone a mascot switch to the Red hawks and it's all over their website. On a recent trip down there, I saw a sign just turning onto their campus.

UM-Rolla has Joe the Miner who is seen on the home page. UMKansas City has Kasey the Kangaroo which they switched to recently and are proud of.

Saint Louis University has the infamous billiken which is plastered all over everything.

Okay, my point is this we have an absent mascot.

I believe it's time to dedicate some University spirit and call out our mascot to be seen.

Our university is growing; we are becoming more traditional with the future opening of the new dorm.

Also, they are serving meals on south campus. All are great improvements. I still think we need a longer time to cross natural Bridge to go from north to south, but I am focusing on our mascot.

I am not ashamed to do funny dances, have my picture taken or hang out with our mascot. Why should we not do those things and more? Why should we not see our mascot or wear a logo of the Riverman proudly?

Brian Skubic, senior, education and history

Awareness of crime on campus can help police

I would like to commend The Current for its article and editorial about the recent carjacking. As the editorial emphasized, it is important that members of the campus community know when there are special threats that may exist so we can take extra precautions.

There is another, possibly more important, reason to notify the campus community of such events as soon as possible. When a crime is committed it is important to identify and debrief potential witnesses as soon as possible. Frequently people who do not even know a crime has been committed may have important information about the crime or perpetrator.

For example, in this case people may have seen the perpetrator before the crime elsewhere on campus and noticed identifying characteristics of behaviors that could provide evidence (e.g., expectorating on the ground which could provide DNA), but because they did not know there was a crime they would have no reason to share this information with the police and, as time passes, it becomes harder to remember details and evidence can be contaminated.

With such a transient environment police cannot just "check with the neighbors" to see if they noticed anyone suspicious; we all are the neighbors, and we can only be identified and interviewed if we know about the crime and make our information available to the police.

So simply for the sake of better crime solving, I would encourage the police to notify the campus community as soon as possible when these events occur, unless there is some compelling reason not to.

The Rogue Librarian

Crime and punishment

RALEIGH MUNS

UM-St. Louis Reference Librarian

On Saturday morning, Aug. 26, I arrived at the T.J. Library for a regularly scheduled weekend shift only to find the entrance swarming with campus police.

It turns out that a nefarious (and not too bright, as you shall read) thief had gotten into the library somehow in order to knock off our safe and retire in great wealth. Not exactly "The Italian Job," as I question the sanity of anyone who thinks knocking off a library safe would be very lucrative.

Apparently, our cretinous crook spent most of the night prying, gouging, twisting, penetrating, and peeling the safe's metal facade to his reward of "less than $250" as reported in The Current.

We take our crime seriously in Library Land, and I can vouch that our libraries are the safest I've ever encountered. We employ professional security who are on hand during all open library hours.

Don't take my compliments about safety as an invitation to leave your purses, backpacks, or laptop computers laying around unattended, as there is no need to invite the occasional opportunist to take your goods. But UM-St. Louis is regularly documented as one of the most crime-free campuses in the state.

The honesty of our student body, or any group of people, isn't universal, but our campus is pretty high in my opinion.

I can recall two times since I've been with the libraries where someone found money (a $5 bill once, and a $20 on another occasion) and turned them in at the Reference Desk as lost and found items.

It was at this moment that I realized the Midwest was a totally different creature than my previous Left Coast habitat of Los Angeles.

At the time I left the UCLA Libraries, they were being harassed by "The Mad Defecator" and stolen backpacks were a daily occurrence (note: in defense, UCLA's library system was MUCH larger than UMSL's, so it wasn't as if theft was happening before one's eyes, minute to minute).

One of my favorite local reads, in fact, are the crime reports in The Current.

I recall a few years ago a rash of thefts of Plymouth Neons in the parking structures (Plymouth Neons?); then there was the faculty member reporting a large can of peanuts lifted from her office which I found particularly intriguing.

My favorite bit of UM-St. Louis larceny might have been last year's great frozen chicken heist at the Millennium Student Center (it was an inside job).

Stealing frozen chicken is a classic. I pictured the crooks in trench coats whispering "Hey, buddy. Ya wanna buy some hot cold chicken?" Followed by a display of drumsticks flashed from inside their floor length coat.

Oh. When these people are caught? They DO go to jail, so don't get any ideas. And turn your books in on time while you're at it.

Librarian's response has faulty logic, reader says

Raleigh Muns, a UM-St. Louis Reference Librarian, took the time to comment on my letter to the editor [in The Current, Nov. 28] regarding the dismal food and library service hours on campus.

I would like the time to point out some misqualifications put forth by Raleigh directed towards my analysis. So that the background is understood, the original letter under contention compared the library hours at UM-St. Louis to those the Universities of North Dakota, Maine and Georgia.

I found, on average, each of those schools' libraries has approximately 10 more hours of library time per week than our own. I concluded my letter with the suggestion that UM-St. Louis should lengthen its library hours to on par with other state-funded universities.

Muns sees our relatively small number of library hours as an outcome of enrollment numbers (and its impact on funds), and attempts to disqualify my comparative approach on the premise that a school with more money will inevitably provide better services (e.g., more library hours) and, thus, any comparison between schools with different vertical statuses is unfounded/unfair/irrelevant.

Muns writes in the Dec. 5 issue of The Current, "I have to point out that [Scott's] comparison of UM-St. Louis with the University of Georgia [UGA] must be discarded since that institution has about 40,000 full-time students. UM-St. Louis' revenue's would easily be doubled with enrollment of that size, allowing for the option of paying for longer hours. This underscores the problems of comparing any university with another."

First, let's assume that Raleigh is correct in his assertion that UGA has 40,000 students (even though the UGA website claims to have less than 32,000 students, which seems more in line with what I remember - I recently got my B.S. and A.B. from there) and this explains why it has longer library hours.

The question is, how can Muns' (un)insightful note on the causal effect of wealth on treatment explain universities with similar enrollments as our own having the same (or longer) hours as UGA, an unlikely event according to the (above) theorizing of Muns?

He condemns comparative research, and yet if he had employed this method, in his rebuttal to my editorial, he would have realized there are pertinent explanations of empirical reality that go beyond monetary considerations.

Muns' excuse for our relatively poor facilities is undeniably flawed according to the following facts: the University of North Dakota, according to its Web site, has an enrollment of 10,725 - the largest it has been in over a decade; furthermore, the University of Maine, according to collegeprofiles.com, has less than 10,000 undergraduates.

Although those schools have smaller enrollment numbers than UM-St. Louis (and half that of UGA), they provide 10 more hours of available library time per week than UM-St. Louis. I don't know why exactly it is that UM-St. Louis has so fewer hours, but there's likely more to the answer than what's considered by Muns.

When "discarding" the legitimacy of someone's analysis, please cover your bases and make sure your explanation actually fits the data being considered (i.e., don't simply omit data because it refutes your opinion). (On an ending note, I'd like to mention that I believe those working at the library to be, for the most part, very helpful and I greatly appreciate their assistance.)

NUTN BUT THE FUNK

LIFE IN HELL

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Single Lambs looking for romance could find Cupid especially accommodating this week. Paired partners also find their relationships benefiting from the chubby cherub's attention.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Keep your keen Bull's eye focused on your target, and shake off any attempt to turn your attention elsewhere. You should get some news later in the week that might answer some questions.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Your early enthusiasm for a project might have been somewhat premature. Although you feel positive about it, you might need more information in order to make an informed decision.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Taking on a new responsibility might seem like the politically correct thing to do. But even with the promise of support, was it the wisest? Consider reassessing your upcoming decision.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Apply yourself to completing your task despite all the distractions that might be interfering with your work. Then reward yourself with a weekend of fun shared with people who are close to you.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) A business agreement from the past might need to be looked at again. Use this unexpected development to check out other matters related to it. A weekend venture proves to be rewarding.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Don't ignore that uneasy feeling about making a commitment. It could be a case of understandably cold feet, or a warning that something isn't as right as it should be.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) A colleague could be more supporting of one of your efforts. But it's up to you to make the case for it, and that could mean opening up a secret or two, which might be a problem for you.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Expect some good news about a relative you've been worried about. But don't expect the full story to be told—at least not yet. A workplace matter might face shifting priorities.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Despite some anxious moments, you could have good reason to be pleased with how things are turning out. An end-of-the-week call might hold some interesting information.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) A long-overdue expression of appreciation could be offered soon. But admit it: You never really expected it would ever happen, right? Meanwhile, keep your weekend options open.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) It's a good time to dive right into a new challenge, whether it's learning a computer program or how to drive a stick shift, or making a new friend. Whatever it is, good luck.

BORN THIS WEEK: You see the wisdom in honesty, and you help others appreciate your vision.

Rivermen, Riverwomen fall in away games at SIUE, Quincy

BY JAMES DAUGHERTY
Staff Writer

The men's and women's basketball teams have been unable to find much success on the road. That trend has continued over the last week.

The Rivermen are almost perfect at home, posting a 9-1 record with a 4-1 conference record; however they are 0-5 in conference games on the road.

On Jan. 19, the Rivermen lost a heart-breaker against SIU-Edwardsville 85-72, and then on Jan. 21, Quincy dominated the Rivermen in a 98-74 beating. The Riverwomen have not had much more success on the road, losing recently to SIU-Edwardsville 69-40 and to Quincy 71-51.

Against SIU-Edwardsville, the Rivermen were competitive until the final four minutes.

The game had eight ties and six lead changes, and the Rivermen were actually up by four, 37-33, at the end of the first half. Although they dominated the boards, posting a +17 edge, their rebounding success was offset by their turnover deficit. They committed 28 turnovers to SIU-Edwardsville's 7. Those 28 turnovers became 22 extra points for the Cougars.

In the second half, the Rivermen managed to get within four, 71-67 with 5:22 left in the game, but then the Cougars went on an 8-0 run to all but put the Rivermen away. Jonathan Griffin led the Rivermen with 22 points, seven rebounds, and five assists.

Quincy was close until 3:45 in the first half. The Rivermen were able to stay with the Hawks trading baskets until the Hawks went on an 18-2 run over the final four minutes of the half to go up 47-31.

The Rivermen trailed by double digits the entire second half, cutting the lead to 16 with 10:26 left to play behind the inside play of David Ward and Derrell Minner. It was as close as the Rivermen would get, as Quincy would go on to lead by as much as 28 before coming away with the 24 point victory.

The Rivermen were hurt most by the Hawks' Paul Walker, who scored 34 points including 8-11 on three pointers, and their own poor shooting, going 37 percent on the night. Ward led the Rivermen with 17 points and six rebounds. The Rivermen are now 10-6 on the season and 4-5 in conference.

The Riverwomen lost in a blowout to the Cougars, 60-49. The team managed to cut the lead to two, 12-10, with 11 minutes left in the first half. However, the Cougars went on a 14-0 run over the next six minutes. By the end of the first half, the lead was extended to 22, 36-14.

The second half fared little better for the Riverwomen, as they would not get closer than 19 and the Cougars would push their lead up to 31 before it was over.

The Riverwomen allowed the Cougars to shoot 50 percent on the game, while only converting 25.9 percent of their own shots. Taylor Gagliano led the Riverwomen with 11 points.

Against Quincy, the Riverwomen went back and forth and had several lead changes during the first half. The team went up by two, 21-19, with five minutes left in the first half, but then the Hawks went on a 19-2 run to finish the half up 38-23.

The Riverwomen got as close as 15 in the second half, but the Hawks pushed the lead back up 28 before finally winning 71-51. Courtney Watts led the team with 16 points and four assists. The Riverwomen are now 9-6 on the season and 3-5 in conference.

The teams will next be in action against Oakland City Jan. 23. The Riverwomen will play at 5:30 p.m. and the Rivermen will follow at 7:30 p.m.
